James Fenwick
and daughter of John Lancaster
who died February 11, 1791

He's gone! He's gone! In silence make his grave
But not in tears _ we would not from his home
Recall his happy soul _ perchance to brave
A weary lot _ too gentle for to roam
Through years of grief to come

Oh God! "Thy will be done in this and in all Things for thou art mercy itself" and tenderly Tempers the wind to the shorn lamb"

aged twelve years five month and seventeen days

This stone is erected by his mourning and affectionate Father and Mother
William L Brent and his wife Maria Fenwick

No early care had worn the tender ties
That bound him here _no grief his heart had bourne
Only too pure for Earth he seemed to rise
To his own Heaven, as doth some silver cloud
Before the winds grow loud.

Fenwick/Brent Family Graveyard

Fenwick vic.

Private

The tiny Fenwick/Brent Family Graveyard contains only six rectangular stones that lie flat on the ground. Sited atop a slight rise on the west side of Fenwick Road, the small cemetery was once associated with an early 19th century plantation known as "Pommonkey" or "Pommonkey Farm." The six engraved stones are severely eroded and difficult to read.

The Fenwick/Brent Family Graveyard is the last extant remnant of an early 19th century plantation that once occupied all of Pommonkey Point. Owned and occupied by the Fenwick and Brent families during the early decades of the 19th century, the plantation, at one time, incorporated a dwelling house, outbuildings.

The Fenwick/Brent Family Graveyard is the last extant remnant of an early 19th century plantation that once occupied all of Pomonkey Point. Owned and occupied by the Fenwick and Brent families during the early decades of the 19th century, the plantation, at one time, incorporated a dwelling house, outbuildings, and a fishery.

James Fenwick acquired the 500-acre "Southampton" estate of Benjamin T. Fendall for a substantial $10,000 in 1814. Fenwick renamed the plantation "Pomonkey" or "Pomonkey Estate," and may have erected a new dwelling house near the site of the present cemetery. Deed records indicate that a house stood somewhere on the 500-acre property prior to 1844.¹ That year, Fenwick's heir and grandson, Robert J. Brent was forced to sell his father's estate along with much of his personal property in order to pay off his debts. The deed of trust in which Brent assigned Joseph H. Bradley as his agent to sell the property, lists the goods up for sale. They included several slaves, mules, cows, oxen & sheep, as well as all the farming utensils on the property, and "all household and kitchen furniture now in the 'Pomonkey House,'" including a bed, bedstead and mattresses. The entire "Pomonkey Estate" and personal property sold for $8950 to Edmund J. Plowden of St. Mary's County.

In 1845, Plowden sold the estate known as "Pomonkey" to a relative, Dr. William H. Plowden for $8000. It is not known whether or not Dr. Plowden occupied the estate, but following his death (before 1870), a equity case concerning Joseph and Henrietta Forrest and Edmund J. Plowden arose, and the court decreed that the property be sold at auction. This time the now 800-acre property sold for a mere $3200. This severe reduction in property value is reflective of the economic decline experience throughout Charles County following the Civil War.

John W. Jenkins purchased the 800 acres of "Pomonkey" in 1870, and in 1882 willed it to two of his sons, John W., Jr. and Eugene A. Jenkins. At his death, the senior Jenkins was possessed of a large quantity of land which included his dwelling plantation known as "Retirement."

By 1888, the property had been again transferred by public sale as a result of a mortgage default. Thomas W. Richmond purchased the remaining 320 acres of "Pommonkey Point" that year for $1894. In 1917, Richmond acquired additional adjacent tracts of land. He transferred this to Edwin A. Richmond and others in 1939. C. Leslie McCrea and others purchased the same 260-acre property from Richmond in 1944. The present owners acquired a portion of this larger tract in 1978.

Further research is necessary to learn more about the Fenwick/Brent family and its contributions to local history.
